

Abstract

The present invention relates to a process for the storage of proteins in an aqueous solution. The addition of cysteine delays the temporal decrease in the effective concentration of the protein. The process is suitable for use in the production of heterologous proteins in microorganisms.